Eltham Cinema moves into sharper focus

A LEADING cinema operator has been appointed by the council to run a new cinema in the heart of Eltham.

The new cinema and restaurant complex is due to open in the area to give a major boost to the local economy and to stimulate more night-time trade and spend in local restaurants.

The operator cannot be named yet for commercial reasons, but an announcement is expected soon.

The council bought the site where Poundland used to be after identifying it as having the potential to spur on local regeneration, through its position at the heart of the High Street.

It is part of an overall masterplan for Eltham, which is seeing a number of major changes to the town centre, including a new-look high street with new public realm.

Chris Roberts, the council leader, said: "We examined closely the options for making the most of this site and are very confident bringing a cinema to Eltham will really help the town centre to flourish, supporting local businesses and extending the hours of spend in the local area.

"It's great news that we're getting closer and closer to this major new facility being opened and attracting a leading operator demonstrates great confidence in Eltham."

Plumstead needs wider variety of shops – and less rubbish left

WHEN I first moved to Plumstead 34 years ago it was a quiet and clean place with different kinds of shops. But now on Plumstead High Street all you will find is pound shops. I understand everyone loves a bargain, but it's getting quite out of hand. Could someone explain how the council issues licences for hairdressing salons, mobile phone and fast food shops? Surely there must be a rule for how many of the same kind of business are allowed in the area? These fast food shops are not only damaging people's health but, as a result, the amount of rubbish left on the streets is increased. As far as I can see, you don't need to have so many mobile phone outlets and hairdressing salons on the high street. It would be a better place if there different kinds of businesses as well. The other thing I have noticed lately is that all sorts of household rubbish is being left wherever a large area can be found, for example on Riverdale Road, making it home for rats and foxes which spread diseases. What I cannot understand is that there are road sweepers passing this rubbish dump and yet nothing is getting done to clean it up. When I phoned their offices I was told nothing could be done as the rubbish was on a private land. I like living in Plumstead. Let's hope there is some kind of resolution to make it a better place to live in.

Mrs J Vara, Plumstead

● A council spokesman said: "Thank you for your letter. The council does have some control over the range of shops that can be found on our high streets and our planning policies set minimum percentages for the types of shops in an area such as Plumstead town centre. However, the classification of shops is decided by the government, and retail outlets such as hairdressers, newsagents, phone shops, and pound shops all come under the same bracket. In many cases, changes of use are allowed through permitted development rights – and therefore do not require planning permission.

Any outlet can therefore change to a hairdressers or a phone shop without planning permission from the council. Hot food takeaways fall under a different classification and if planning permission were to be requested for a shop to change from retail to a hot food takeaway then it would need to comply with the council's planning policy regulations. Thank you for informing us of dumped rubbish on Riverdale Road. The alleyway in question is private land and it's the responsibility of the owner to clear it. We have contacted the managing agent responsible for this land and have given them a quote to remove the fly tip. Alternatively, they can arrange to have the rubbish removed themselves."

I'm glad to see borough being dementia aware

IN response to last week's article 'Be Dementia Aware' I would like to say how delighted I was to see that Royal Greenwich is supporting Dementia Awareness week.

I agree that early diagnosis is vital both for the person living with dementia and their informal carers. The emphasis on making Royal Greenwich a dementia-friendly borough is also impressive and especially with the launch of the 'Business Toolkit'. However, I urge all of us not to lose sight of the importance of the quality of care people with dementia receive in our care homes.

This was highlighted by the recent BBC Panorama's programme 'Behind Closed Doors: Elderly Care Exposed'.

I believe to avoid similar incidences of physical and emotional abuse our care workers and house managers need to receive quality training, support and supervision which encourages and provide opportunities for continuous professional development.

A recent research visit into dementia care in Japan has giving me an insight into good practice.

A care worker's job is a recognised profession, consequently it is paid accordingly.

Training is provided in conflict resolutions and stress management; emotional support is provided, too. To sum up, to be dementia-friendly we need to consider the accessibility of all environments, societies attitudes, community involvement and the care provided both to the person living with dementia and their families.

An Arsenal of arts

Big names show interest in a new Cultural Quarter

by Ian Lamont

THE Royal Arsenal is set to become London's newest cultural destination under plans announced by the royal borough last Friday.

The council has already received expressions of interest from three major arts institutions for the proposed Cultural Quarter.

New art galleries, rehearsal rooms, dance studios, theatre space and museums could be added to the Arsenal, which already hosts the Greenwich Heritage Centre and the Firepower exhibition.

They include world-renowned dance organisation, the Hofesh Schechter Company who visited the growing arts and entertainment hub on the Woolwich waterfront last Friday.

More than 18 million visitors come to the borough each year with 12,000 jobs depending on tourism and culture.

Many of the country's best loved and most experienced cultural groups are based in the borough.

These include the internationally renowned Trinity Laban Conservatoire of Music and Dance and Greenwich and Docklands International Festival.

Choreographer Hofesh Schechter joined royal borough council leader Chris Roberts, to show support for the creation of a Cultural Quarter.

Roberts said: "The royal borough supports and funds arts and cultural organisations to deliver a wide range of learning and participation programmes throughout the year.

"It is our ambition to make the Royal Arsenal London's newest cultural destination, which will enable the local community to engage with inspirational national and international artists and companies, providing opportunities for access and participation in the arts."

Hofesh Schechter is one of the world's most exciting contemporary artists, having gained international renown for his raw, honest choreography and highly-charged, atmospheric music scores.

His work has been commissioned by Sadler's Wells Theatre and the Southbank Centre, as well as leading international dance companies in the USA and Europe while his company of international dancers and musicians tours worldwide to critical and popular acclaim.

A silent tribute for Lee

WOOLWICH Town Hall hosted a ceremony to mark the one-year anniversary of the murder of Fusilier Lee Rigby, last Thursday (May 22).

The Mayor of Greenwich Cllr Angela Cornforth led the occasion, which included the observation of a two-minutes' silence and the playing of the Last Post by a bugler.

The Mayor's tribute to Drummer Lee Rigby was echoed by borough Dean, The Revd Mike Leader who said a prayer honouring Lee's life and his family's bravery.

Sam Batty, president of the Royal British Legion Thamesmead and Abbey Wood Branch of the Royal British Legion said the commendation.

Town Hall flags were lowered in memory of Lee and the Mayor and leader of the council also laid a wreath at the Woolwich Barracks later that day.

Council leader Chris Roberts will also be writing to Lee's family to establish direct contact with them and to ensure that the council can work alongside them as they continue to remember Lee and the sacrifice he made for his country."

During her speech, the Mayor said: "The communities of our royal borough have always shown respect and enduring support for our armed services – for the role that they play and for the risks that they take. We recognise the debt that we owe to Fusilier Lee Rigby and we know that today is a difficult day for his family and friends who loved him dearly."

Fifth skills centre agreed

ANOTHER new skills centre is being created in the borough after the council purchased a site in Plumstead.

The site at 82-86 Nathan Way has been earmarked for the creation of an industrial estate and new Craft Skills Centre.

On completion the new craft centre will provide 500 new training opportunities a year.

It also adds to the council's set of skills centres which together are creating 2,500 training places across the borough.

The development will also generate some 46,000 sq ft of new industrial space which will help to meet the growing demand from businesses wishing to operate in the borough. The prospect of a Crossrail station at Woolwich being operational in 2018 is raising the profile of the borough, and increasing interest from businesses moving into and investing in Greenwich.

Under the proposals agreed by the council, 20 business units will be built on the site. This will be complimented with two larger units that will make up the Craft Skills Centre – bringing the total number of skills centres in the borough to five.

Greenwich Council is providing the bulk of the funding for the project to develop the industrial units, with costs for the craft skills centre coming from the Working Neighbourhood Fund and Lovells who will be the council's partner in running the centre.

Building work on site is due to begin at the end of year and completed in 2015, subject to planning permission.

No strong brews

Woolwich traders help to tackle alcohol-fuelled crimes

by Dick Townsend-Smith

SHOPS and supermarkets in Woolwich town centre are signing up to a new campaign designed to cut alcohol fuelled crimes.

More than half the businesses that sell alcohol have already signed up to a scheme in which they agree to stop selling super strength lager and cider brewed at six per cent or more.

Small shops and bigger stores are being encouraged to join the voluntary programme.

The high-strength alcohol campaign called 'Reducing the Strength' is being piloted in Woolwich town centre. And there are plans to extend it to other parts of the borough.

Local police say extra strong lager and cider are a huge factor in violent crime and antisocial behaviour in the town centre.

Their figures show that alcohol plays a part in 11 per cent of all crimes, but rockets to 25 per cent when it involves violence against people.

Alcohol is sold by 27 shops and stores in the town area, and so far 16 have promised not to sell super strength alcohol.

Trader Jay Patel, manager of the newsagents in Greens End, near the DLR station, is backing the initiative.

He said: "I stopped selling strong lager and cider three months ago – I was the first one to do it. I have found a big difference in three months with the sort of people who come into the shop. Some of them still come in and argue if we refuse to serve them, but it has done me a big favour to stop selling strong alcohol. I have lost a little bit in takings, but I'm very pleased to be part of the campaign."

"Some other shops are still selling it, and I think that if I've stopped, then everyone else should as well. If that happens, then the campaign will work."

Betting shop taskforce to launch in July

A NEW scheme is being set up to prevent crime generated by the high concentration of betting shops in Woolwich Town Centre.

A quarter of all antisocial behaviour in the town centre involves bookies' premises. Half of town centre betting shops are based in the Greens End and Beresford Square area. Of the 96 crimes committed in this area last year, more than a fifth took place in the betting shops.

In July a new council-led information-sharing forum, called BetWatch, is being launched in partnership with betting shop managers, the police, and shops that sell alcohol. It aims to encourage bookies to become more responsible when taking bets – for example not doing business with people who appear to be drug users or the worse for drink. A council spokesperson said: "The partnership wants to work with bookmakers to encourage them to identify and address any issues to provide a safe environment for their customers and staff as they themselves can often be victims."

OFF THE SHELVES: trader Jay Patel no longer sells super strength lager and cider

Rush hour patrols

THE Woolwich police team is running special patrols around Beresford Square and General Gordon Square.

The team made up of a sergeant and four police constables, aims to provide reassurance to local people around the squares.

Officers will also provide reassurance to the community during busy times in the town centre, particularly during rush hour when school pupils are travelling home.

Chief Inspector Martin Rolston, in charge of Safer Neighbourhoods teams said: "The team is in place to patrol specifically the town centre and provide locals with visibility and reassurance. Please feel free to approach any of our officers who will be able to assist. We want to ensure that people feel safe – we will deal immediately with any anti-social behaviour issues, which we know can really affect those working or frequenting General Gordon Square".

The sergeant in charge is PS Matt Burns.

Sponsorship boost for young tall ships sailors

DEVELOPERS who are sponsoring two tall ships crew members have been so impressed that they have agreed to sponsor three more young sailors.

Last week the Cathedral Group officially announced its sponsorship of two lucky trainees taking part in the Falmouth to Royal Greenwich Tall Ships regatta.

The announcement was made when sponsors for the tall ships festival got together on board the Cutty Sark earlier this month. They included Cathedral who are behind the development of The Movement next to Greenwich DLR station, Sail Training International and the Greenwich Hotel, the festival's hotel partner owned by Lady Rona Delves Broughton.

Ethan O'Neill, from North Greenwich and Sapphire Hales, from Greenwich, both 16, have already been selected to receive financial support to cover their training.

Ethan, said: "I'm already training to build up my fitness levels. I am grateful to Cathedral Group for giving me this opportunity."

And Sapphire told GT: "I am participating in the Duke of Edinburgh's Awards and this chance to sail in the Tall Ships Regatta is a real benefit. I hope to write a blog about my experience on the race, which will be great to look back on in the future."

The Cathedral Group has been so impressed with the event and its involvement of young people that it is set to back three more young sailors.

Its chief executive Richard Upton, who grew up in Eltham, said: "We passionately believe in investing in youth and providing opportunities for young people to widen their horizons. We initially agreed to sponsor two young residents from the royal borough for this tremendous sailing opportunity and I have just agreed to sponsor three more young, gritty people. Even better if they are students from my old school, Crown Woods, and I would encourage other local businesses to following our path and support this great skills initiative."

All trainees will have the opportunity to sail from Falmouth to Royal Greenwich, for a trip of a lifetime. The adventure continues during a five-day regatta with more than 50 tall ships moored along the banks of the Thames.

The event will see more than 50 tall ships moored along the Greenwich shoreline with daily sails up to London Bridge.

The royal borough is sponsoring 30 young people to take part in the regatta, and is also calling on other organisations and businesses to support other young people for the event.

'Special family' turns 10

by Ian Lamont

Disability sports charity celebrates with World Cup

FOUNDER Sharon Brokenshire described South London Special League as "one big family" at the group's 10th anniversary World Cup tournament.

And Sharon, who started the organisation with her redundancy money, received huge praise from many quarters at the London Marathon Playing Fields at Shooters Hill last Thursday.

Lord Pendry, who was at the launch of the charity which gives sporting opportunities to people with disabilities, represented the Football Foundation - of which he is president - at the event, featuring 150 children from schools across south London.

He said: "Elections are going on in my constituency in Manchester but I wouldn't have missed this for anything. I was an MP for 31 years and shadow sports minister for five and you can only admire what Sharon has done."

"She has put so much effort into helping children with disabilities who enjoy playing football. Grass roots level is what it's all about and she's brought a distinctly different approach to grass roots football for disabilities."

Ex-professional footballer Paul Elliott, who started his career at Charlton, explained why he had been only too happy to say yes when Sharon asked him to be the SLSL patron 10 years ago - and intends to continue.

He said: "I sit on many boards - probably 21 in total - and I've known Sharon for a long time. When I do talks, I talk about leadership, commitment and dedication and people being born to make a difference - and that is Sharon.

"A lot of people are excluded from mainstream sport because of their disability and my heart was really in supporting this. I am proud and privileged to be the patron. It is so wonderfully inclusive."

Referring to awards won at local, national and European football levels, he added: "Sharon and her team deserve all the recognition they receive. There's no agenda with her, she just wants to provide for people with disabilities."

Paul, also a director of Charlton Athletic Community Trust since its inception, was presented with a Jack Petchey leadership award by SLSL when the presentations were made to the day's winners.

A team from Croydon, playing as South Korea, won the main contest for U16 teams, beating a side from West Wickham.

Corelli College, playing as France, lost their semi-final after coming second in their group, but won one of the fair play awards.

PE teacher Sara Lea said of SLSL: "It is really good for our children in terms of team building."

"Lots of the boys have difficulty with social skills and sport improves that. We've done boccia and curling through [SLSL] and the kids have really enjoyed it."

Charlton Park Academy, playing as Netherlands, also reached the semi-finals.

Sharon told everyone at the end: "We are a team and a family. South London Special League is the best team in the world and you are all one big family."

FIVE playgrounds in the borough are now in full swing with new equipment designed especially for children with disabilities.

It is part of the Playground to Podium initiative, which ensures a long and lasting legacy from the London 2012 Games.

The playgrounds are in Kidbrooke's Chiswell Square, Charlton Park, Eltham Park, Hornfair Park and The Slade in Plumstead.

They have been equipped with new swings, climbing frames, slides and roundabouts.

The new kit means all children with a disability, including wheelchair users, can play with other children and get important exercise. Similar equipment is now being considered for other borough playgrounds.

The new facilities follow talks with a specialist children's physiotherapist and Greenwich Parent Voice, a group of parents and carers who have children with disabilities or special educational needs.

GPV parent Vivien Davies said: "We are thrilled that we now have playgrounds designed for children of all abilities to play in together."

"These are modern, imaginative and fully accessible - a space for kids to have fun, take physical risks safely, make new friends and burn off some energy in the fresh air."

High five!

To date, Playground to Podium has secured nearly £5million to provide first-class play and fitness facilities.

They include 14 new outdoor gyms, six cricket nets and two full-sized wickets, three new multi-use games areas and refurbishing 12 tennis courts and 23 playgrounds.

It has also helped provide competition-level sports facilities in schools, the new BMX track in Hornfair Park, and helped finance the major refurbishment of the Lido at Charlton.

A council spokesman said: "These improved facilities demonstrate our commitment to securing a long-lasting sporting and healthy living legacy for all our residents."

"We want to ensure that children with disabilities can access play at a range of locations across the borough."

Greens to envy

Dick Townsend-Smith learns more about a summer programme of music and entertainment in royal borough parks and open spaces

Alexandra Players get a foot in the door

HE started off with a classic, The Guns of Navarone (1961), got better with Wild Geese (1978) and closed strongly with two Harry Potters (2000-2002). Between screen successes, Richard Harris wrote a hot Broadway show (Stepping Out), sang a UK hit single (MacArthur Park) and wrote a number of works for the theatre. One of his comedies, 'A Foot in the Door', opens next week at a small theatre in Charlton. Keith Hartley directs the Alexandra Players, "the borough's best kept secret", and he explained their unusual choice. "It's funny, it's rapid and it's full of potential and it's the third Harris play that we've done". Harris was prolific initially for TV writing episodes for The Avengers, The Saint and The Sweeney. In the 1970s he turned his attention to theatre, Stepping Out Evening Standard Comedy of the Year. A Foot in the Door is similar in tone with more than its fair share of chaos. Some dinner guests, a sales pitch and an elderly widow and her disinclination to buy. Hartley explained the play's central dynamic: "the guests' relentless insistence, her absolute indifference and the comic implications are enormous." Hartley will direct a talented group including two newcomers, Bennett Lau and Laura Steel, with regular Janet Sweet in the lead as May Archer. "She's surprisingly wily", Hartley went on. Shortly before his death back in 2002 Harris ranted: "I don't want to be remembered just for those Potter films." He needn't have worried – a wider legacy will surely endure.

Richard Morgan

A Foot in the Door runs May 29-31 at 8pm at the Alexandra Hall, Bramshott Avenue, Charlton. Tickets £8, £7 concs. Call 07867 627 987 or visit <http://alexandraplayers.org.uk>

OUTDOOR JOY: visitors can enjoy a musical presentation and fun activities at previous Parksfest events

SCENE

THIS year's Royal Greenwich PARKSfest gets underway on Sunday (June 1), beginning with a family fun day in Well Hall Pleasaunce from noon to 5pm.

A total of 18 events are being held throughout June and July and into August.

It's the sixth year of the festival, which brings communities together to both enjoy and feel proud of the stunning open spaces on their doorsteps. The event is funded by the royal borough and is part of the Greenwich Festivals - a programme of boroughwide summer events for residents and visitors. PARKSfest is organised by the Greenwich Parks Forum, with individual events run by Friends of the Parks groups.

Terry Powley, chair of the forum, said: "PARKSfest is a key part of the Greenwich Festivals and the important thing is that the series of events are organised by local people with performances by local artistes in local places. Events attract more local people into local parks to enjoy cultural activities but it's clear that people are coming from further afield to see the open air concerts."

More information at www.parksfest.org

Boxing clever to stay out of trouble

YOUNGSTERS assigned to a programme to steer them away from anti-social behaviour and falling into crime have won a trophy against a similar group from Bromley for a second year running.

About a dozen young men aged 13-19 have been taking part in the PuncheZ course, which uses boxing as a platform to learn discipline, team-building, social interaction, fitness and behaviour.

The 16-week courses have been held at the Waterfront for about 18 months. It was set up by the Frank Bruno Foundation, in conjunction with the Greenwich Youth Offending Service, with coaches supplied from Boxing 4 Schools.

Youngsters do sparring routines and also take part in sessions such as first aid, sexual health and drugs, with visiting speakers including the Police and the service's volunteer cadets.

One young person who has turned his life around, Femi, 18, has been on the courses since they began. He is now an apprentice web designer with a company in Vauxhall, while taking a four-year Open University

SPARRING TO LEARN:
The youngsters work out with an instructor degree course. He appreciates the chance to get fit.

"When I do this and I'm out of breath, I just know I have got fitter," he said. "Even if I haven't improved my fitness on a particular day, I've been involved in a challenge and tested what I can do and I like a challenge."

On the competition and trophy victory, he added: "We had to run and do press ups and do things like putting stickers on parts of the body to identify them (against the clock) and it was fun."

Femi now hopes to improve the life of others. "What I want to do is be the person training other people to get fit," he said.

"Working in a group can be as good as working by yourself. I learn from the coaches here, so I can take that position as leader," said Femi, who is the captain of a football team in Plumstead.

Another teenager, Lucas, who was referred to the course, said: "It keeps me off the streets and [away from] causing trouble." He is doing a sports and leisure BTEC course jointly at Charlton Athletic and Bexley College.

competition I do I'm confident of throwing a PB," she said. "Everyone around me knows I'm going to throw far this year, we just don't know when!"

The Blackheath & Bromley AC member, a former junior international as a discus thrower, also did shot putt at the Loughborough international, throwing 15.96, close to a B standard.

She could do both events in the Commonwealth Games.

She said: "It's a possibility, but I've concentrated on hammer, I've not had so much time for shot."

"The throw was somewhere up near my best ever [16.39]."

"It always happens. I concentrate on one event but the other goes well," said Shaunagh, who said good hammer throwing was down to being relaxed.

"It might have been so good because I was annoyed with the hammer result."

Starting Blocks
hammer thrower vows to hit mark for Commonwealth Games in Glasgow

by Ian Lamont

SHAUNAGH Brown says it is a case of when, not if, she throws big enough to gain automatic selection for the Commonwealth Games in Glasgow in July.

Having thrown her hammer 66.06 metres - her second longest throw ever - in the United States last month, the 24-year-old managed 64.32m at the Loughborough International.

Shaunagh, ranked fourth in England this year, could be one of three selected with a B standard throw of 64m, but needs 66.50m to gain an A standard which would guarantee selection.

Her personal best, set last year, is 66.06m. "Every
